WRINKLE CORRECTION WITH HYALURONIC ACID

The formation of wrinkles is usually accelerated by external factors, such as solar radiation, smoking, and lifestyle. There are various methods for effective wrinkle correction that interfere with the aesthetics of the skin. One of the ways to make early wrinkles disappear is to fill them with substances that can be broken down, such as hyaluronic acid (for instance, Restylane). Hyaluronic acid is a natural substance in our body that binds water in the skin, thereby moisturising it and, as a result, reducing wrinkles. A small amount of this gel is injected under the skin using a needle. The result is immediately visible and persists for about one year. The treatment can be repeated as many times as desired. Hyaluronic acid is used, for example, to correct nasolabial folds (the folds between the nose and lips). It is also ideal for fine lines around the lips. The lip volume lost over time can also be replenished with hyaluronic acid.

The images below show all possible treatment areas in more detail:

Forehead and eye area

- Wrinkles left by worries and fears can be smoothed out with hyaluronic acid.
- Sunken circles under the eyes, which make the face look tired, can be lifted again.
- The eyebrows become voluminous and slightly raise.
- Lateral periorbital lines or creases that appear from laughter are reduced

Central facial area

- Cheekbone injections restore the face to its beautiful oval-heart shape.
- When you lose weight, sunken cheeks may appear. Filling them in gives a youthful appearance.
- You can even out any bumps on your nose.
- Wrinkled earlobes become resilient again.

Lower facial area

- Correction of deep nasolabial folds and marionette wrinkles returns a youthful look to the area around your lips.
- You can slightly emphasise the lip lines and the Cupid's bow area, as well as restore them to their original volume.
- Following the injections, the chin line becomes more attractive and it looks toned.
